“ James is the guy I will always think of whenever I hear a John Mellencamp song. Not just any one song in particular because he loved them all just like me. The first time Kathleen and I met James was in 1987 at a John Mellencamp Lonesome Jubilee album release party in Indianapolis. Come to find out not only did we share a love for John's music, but we also shared the date of December 11th as our birthday. We just clicked together and found it easy to carry on conversation. Over the years we always discussed the newest songs released by John and what they meant to us. We attended a lot of Mellencamp concerts together too. James and I stood and waited an entire day together in April of 2006 on Meridian Street downtown Indianapolis to get front row for John's concert at Monument Circle that night.

I also admired James for a few reasons, including his work ethic. Even during his illness he battled through it and continued to work as long as he could. He always had a kind word, and I don't think he ever met a stranger. Most of all James had a very caring and generous nature. I think he always helped anyone, at any time with anything, no questions asked.

We will miss James, but never forget his friendship.
