“ Jimmy, I have learned a very hard lesson. This should not be happening you are way too young to have had to leave this earth. But, the good lord has a plan for each and everyone of us even before we are born. My heart hurts, my mind is going crazy with what if's, but I know deep down in side we loved each other so much that the what ifs will soon be gone. Baby brother I will cherish all the good times and let all the what ifs lay to rest. I miss you so much, and love you so much it hurts. My calming right now is that we will meet again. RIP my sweet baby and only brother. Love your big sis Missy

“ Jennifer (J.J.)

If we are fortunate we are given a warning. If not, there is only the sudden horror, the wrench of being torn apart, of being reminded that nothing is permanent, not even the love of our life in which our world revolves around. Life is a fragile affair. We must cherish each moment without reservation. Now. Today. This minute.

We will lose our loved ones or they will lose us someday. This is certain. And the loss will leave a great pit in our hearts, a pit we struggle to avoid during the day and fall into at night. There are those that are unable to accept such a profound loss, unable to determine the worth of life, and jump into a black pit, spiritually or physically, hoping to find them there. And then there is you, you will survive the shock, the denial, the horror, the bargaining, the barren, empty aching, the unanswered prayers, the sleepless nights when your breath is crushed under the weight of silence and its constant reminder of your loss. You will survive all that and, like a flower opening after a storm, you will slowly begin to remember the love you lost in a different way...The laughter, the irrepressible spirit, the generous heart, the way their smile made you feel, the encouragement they would give even if their own dreams were dying. And in time, that pit begins to fill up with these treasures, the only memories that really matter. We will still cry. We will always cry. But with loving reflection more than hopeless longing. And that is how we survive. That is how the story will continue. That is how they would want it to be.

*My deepest and most heart felt sympathys to you and Brandon. I love you!
