“ As our Eucher night approaches we will miss him and his zany way of taking the tricks. We will miss his kindness and his intelligence, and his wisdom will be missed the most. We wished he would of stayed home with us but we know he died with his Independence in tact and his dignity still intact. We have cried many tears for him as he had found happiness in spite of all the obstacles that stood in his path. I do believe he is looking down on us right now and proud of who and what he stood for. He had suffered and endured so much. He never gave up on himself and God will have the honor of him now.

“ fondest memory is of his laughter, and his acceptance of people, in spite of how he had been treated from people who did not really know him. His overwhelming kindness and most of all his stubbornness which made him who he was. You will be in our prayers and so much missed.
